In cooperation with ImpactHub Karlsruhe, Karlshochschule International University organised a final workshop as part of the ENTREHUBS project last Thursday evening.

With almost 30 participants from Karlsruhe and the surrounding area, we were able to discuss the project results in depth and in particular exchange views on what content entrepreneurship education should address from an academic perspective. We discussed a lot in three groups and in the end it became clear to us that the academic added value should consist of teaching not only theories and specialization, but also activity and action skills in particular, e.g. organizational methods, including ethical reflection, as well as strengthening personal skills such as positive thinking and valuing interaction with one another.

It was very stimulating and exciting to talk to so many different people and as some were still exchanging ideas at 10.30 pm, new networks were also diligently built.
